Harvard Referencing Style Guide

The purpose of this guide is to provide a brief introduction to referencing in the British Standard Harvard style used at Edge Hill University. A British Standard is a set of standards and specifications for the production of goods and services and is published by the British Standards Institute. This guide is based on the British Standard ISO 690:2010 Information and documentation, and the layout of this guide has been informed by Harvard style conventions currently being followed in UK Universities.

Unless your department or tutor has advised otherwise, you should follow the advice provided in this guide.

What is referencing?

Referencing is the way that you acknowledge your use of other people's work or ideas. Whenever you summarise, refer to, or quote from an author's work, you must acknowledge (cite) your information source.

What is a reference?

There are two parts to a reference:

- A citation goes in the main text of your work and acts as a flag to indicate that you are using someone else's ideas.
- A reference gives the full details of where the information came from. This goes in an alphabetical list at the end of your work.

General guidance

- You need to reference every time you use, or refer to, another person's work within your own.
- Check your module handbook or speak to your tutor to check you are using the right style.
- Make use of online style guides and toolkits available.
- Keep a record of all your sources – this will make writing them all up much easier.
- It is important that your referencing is consistent.

Alphabetical order

A bibliography/ reference list should be presented in alphabetical order. For most sources the author(s) will be listed first, with the author's family name preceding the author's initials. However, some sources, including legislation, films, Parliamentary Bills, radio and tv programmes and religious texts start with the title, which is not capitalised. Law reports start with the names of the parties in the court case concerned.

Layout and formatting

Information should be taken from the cited source. You should follow the format/layout of the original document or information source, this includes things like spelling and capitalisation.

Incomplete references – no author / anonymous

If you cannot identify an author, corporate author, organisation, or the item does not appear to have an author, use Anon. However, it is important that you identify the source of any evidence you include in your work. Therefore, you may wish to consult your tutor about using references that cannot be verified.

Incomplete references – no date

If you want to cite a source of information but are unable to identify a date, you may replace the year with the letters n.d. which simply means no date.

Citations

Citations (in text)

A citation goes in the main body text of your work and acts as a 'flag' indicating that you are using someone else's ideas. The author's family name (or name of organisation) and year of publication are cited in the text of your work and the full details of the source are included in a reference list or bibliography at the end of the assignment.

Reading is a part of learning and becomes easier with practice. 'Readers become more proficient the more that they practice' (Eron, 2019: 48).

Eron (2019) suggests that practice can improve reading ability and ...

'Although women in the UK on average live longer than men, women spend a significantly greater proportion of their lives in ill health and disability when compared with men' (Department of Health and Social Care, 2022: 2).

A recent report on women's health by the Department of Health and Social Care (2022) discusses the gender disparity in health outcomes.

Citations – Short Quotations from a source

Quotations are the actual words of an author and short quotations (three lines or less) should be placed in single speech marks. You should also include the page number.

Smyth (2020: 62) argues that 'this is an extremely complex process, and no one factor alone can provide a satisfactory explanation'.

It has been suggested that 'this is an extremely complex process, and no one factor alone can provide a satisfactory explanation' (Smyth, 2020: 62).

Citations – Long Quotations from a source

Quotations over three lines are considered to be long quotations and should be presented as a separate block of text. You should leave a line space immediately before and after the quoted words and indent the text. Long quotations do not need to be enclosed in speech marks. The following examples demonstrate how to present a long quote using a narrative citation (within the main text) and using a parenthetical citation (in brackets at the end).

In discussing the benefits of outdoor learning for children, Lowry (2021: 6) argues that, giving children well-managed opportunities to discover, learn about and experience the living world is highly beneficial in a number of ways. In addition to enhancing their health, wellbeing and educational outcomes, learning in natural environments can have positive effects on children's resilience, self-esteem, communication skills, team work and behaviour.

In discussing the benefits of outdoor learning for children, it has been argued that,

In addition to enhancing their health, wellbeing and educational outcomes, learning in natural environments can have positive effects on children's resilience, self-esteem, communication skills, team work and behaviour (Lowry, 2021: 6).

Citations - Paraphrasing a book or journal article

Paraphrasing is when you sum up an author's work in your own words. This can be done two ways, either is correct.

Turner (2019) argues that academic writing is important.

It has been suggested that academic writing is important (Turner, 2019).

Citations - Joint or multiple authors

If you are citing a book or journal article with two or three authors, the form is:

Skinner, Bywaters and Kennedy (2022) argue that there is a clear link between poverty and child abuse.

For more than three authors you would write:

Hughes et al. (2023) maintain that biodiversity loss is driven by inequalities in consumption around the world rather than by an increase in the human population.

If the whole of the citation is in brackets, the correct format would be:

A recent study has looked at the link between thermal and mental well-being, with an emphasis on the cooling qualities of forests (Gillerot et al., 2024).

The phrase, 'et al.' is an abbreviation of the Latin et alia and means 'and others'. As et al. is an abbreviation, Edge Hill Harvard always includes the full stop at the end.

Citing several authors who have made similar points in different texts (synthesising)

When more than one author has made a similar point, you can paraphrase the information and cite all the authors. This is sometimes known as synthesising the literature. In text citations with more than one source use a semi colon to separate the authors.

There has been much debate about parents' right to discipline their children (Green, 2015; Jones, 2017; Brown, 2020; Smith, 2020).

Citations – Works by the same author, written in the same year

If an author has produced several reports or articles in the same year, distinguish between them by adding lower-case letters:

Recent studies by Broad (2020a, 2020b, 2020c) seem to suggest...

In your reference list each source written by the same author in the same year should be in alphabetical order of the title of each work. Using the example above, it would be possible to cite 2020c before 2020a in the text of your work.

Citations – Edited book

If you are referencing the book in general, or from the editor's introduction / summary, then you cite the editor of the book in your essay text.

Morgan (2012) suggests that student experience in higher education has...

Then in your reference list/bibliography:

MORGAN, M., ed., 2011. Improving the Student Experience: A practical guide for universities and colleges. London: Routledge.

Citations – Edited book chapter

When referencing a specific chapter in an edited book you cite the author of the chapter in your essay text (not the editor of the book); in this case Krause:

It is important to employ a wide range of communication tools to engage with students (Krause, 2012).

Then in your reference list/bibliography:

KRAUSE, K., 2012. Arrival and orientation. In: M. MORGAN, ed. Improving the Student Experience: A practical guide for universities and colleges. London: Routledge. pp. 69-87.

Citations – Kindle eBook

If you need to use a direct quotation from an eBook that does not have page numbers, use the chapter number or section heading in your in-text citation instead.

“Cities are not only responsible for a substantial proportion of global warming, but they will also be greatly affected by it in coming decades” (Frankopan, 2023, Introduction).

Citations – Act of Parliament or Statutory Instrument

Acts of Parliament and Statutory Instruments have no author, so cite them by the title. Include the year without a comma, as this is considered to be a part of the title.

Recent housing legislation emphasises that ... (The Leasehold and Freehold Reform Act 2024)

The Income Tax (Exemption of Social Security Benefits) (No. 2) Regulations 2024 stipulate ...

Citations - Government body or organisation

If you reference an organisation or government body such as World Health Organization, or the Department for Health and Social Care, the first time you mention the organisation give their name in full, followed by the abbreviation in brackets. From then on you can use the abbreviated version of the name.

The World Health Organization (WHO) (2020) suggests that ...

Citations - Website

If there is no named author, use the name of the website. For example:

Shelter (2019) have campaigned against ...

Secondary citation or referencing

If you want to cite a source within a source, you should always try to trace the original reference in the first instance. If this is not possible, you should acknowledge both sources in the text, but only include the item you actually read in your reference list.

In the assignment text:

Cook (1959, cited in Stakelum, 2023: 25) refers to ...

Note that, Stakelum, not Cook, will go in the reference list because you have not read Cook's original work: you read about it in Stakelum's book.

In the reference list:

STAKELUM, M., 2023. Understanding Music Education: Exploring Children's Musical Worlds. London: SAGE.

Reference List

Act of Parliament

Acts of Parliament have no author, so they need to be listed by title. There is no comma between the name of the Act and the year because the year is a part of the title.

BEEBEE, T., 2023. Brue Valley Rhynes: treasure troves of the Somerset Levels. British Wildlife. 34 (7), pp. 508-513.

Journal article (online)

As with other online sources, the reference needs to include a URL (Uniform Resource Locator, or what we often refer to as a 'link' or a 'weblink'). Try to use the most concise and direct link possible, usually taken from the article's hosting page (or its entry in a database) via a link or cite button (copy-pasting from the browser address bar may result in a very long link!).

If this URL is very long, or you only have the article's unique DOI (Digital Object Identifier), you can use the DOI to create a persistent URL (which will not change and take the reader directly to the article).

Create this type of URL by adding <https://doi.org/> before the DOI number. For example, an article with the DOI 10.1017/S0047279422000952 will have the URL <https://doi.org/10.1017/S0047279422000952>
This method will always work to correctly reference your chosen online journal article.

Journal article (published online before print publication)

When an article is accepted for publication by a journal, it is often published online first. The publication of the article in a print issue can occur up to two years later. This means that the online article will not have a volume number, an issue number, or page numbers until it has been published in an issue of the journal. Forthcoming should be used after the year of publication to indicate that the article is currently, what is called, in-press.

Journal article (with more than three authors)

For four or more authors, give the name of the first author then 'et al.' in your essay text (see Citations – joint or multiple authors). However, in your reference list, you should list all of the authors.
